of one aspect of modern life which he desired to touch upon. We said:

"The impetuous dash of this old heroic figure, flashing with his chariot across the Judean hills to one that has caught the world's eye, and the way of him has become a common proverb of our English speech. He is quite worthy study for his achievement, and the queer make-up of character he presents. But in the brief time we have, we borrow only the thought of this line from the picture that has been painted on the record of the age, the fact that he drove furiously. The reckless swing of him and his steeds, flying along the dusty roads, seems out of harmony with the slow and quiet spirit of that far yesterday, and must have nade him a figure wonderful to his time.

the amusement spirit to possess us instead of serving us? Has not the body taken the place of mind and soul almost wholly in our leisure hours? Has not pleasure, the buxom waiting maid of our resting time, who was wont to charm us in the place of good books, good pictures, good plays, the good homes with their simple hospitalities and delights, come to be a tyrant mistress garbed in luxury, dazzling in flashing paste and with face and eyes heetic with unholy passion?

"One of the prominent men of the city said within the week, as in the chance meeting of the street an inquiry was made as to his health, 'I am tired out. Night after night, it is go, go, go, theatre, dinner-party, automobile, until I am sick of it. I wish we could have a little more of home. My pieasure hours take more out of me than business does.' We have a beautiful city, one with facilities for enjoyment. The great resorts are places delightful for an hour of leisure. The canyons are unsurpassed for beauty and convenience of access. The most skilful plans are laid to draw people to the varied enjoyments afforded for leisure hours. The city is famed as a pleasure loving The city is famed as a pleasure loving and indulging one.

"New, I have no word to say against any of these places except the race track, estracised by all the great common-wealths of America for its iniquitous inweaths of America for its iniquitous in-fluences and its character-rot so perilous to youth in particular, but duty demands that a word be spoken in regard to the madness of indulgence that makes play work, and life a grind where it ought to be a delight.

"But in the glorious summer time, with its hours of opportunity for leisure, amusement should be the incidental. All our life ought to be pleasurable. But amusement should not be indulgence, our pleasure should minister to our upbuilding and renewal. The idea that every hour of leisure must be yielded to the sfren call of sensuousness is a damnable and damaging one. It injures socially because of that which it causes us to neglect as well as its unfitting influence on lect as well as its unfitting influence on "The wealthy and the well-to-do can help greatly this problem. Rational amusement in every walk of life is as important as rational education. It is not that wealth is culpable in seeking enjoyment. But in a land where the common citizenship seems to argue equality in all things, and the temptation is to seek to match in indulgence the pace set by those with means and leisure for unusual measure of enjoyment in the field of amusement, there is a demand for a fine unselfishness which will set a rational pace in all these matters. By the removal of that temptation that lies in ostentation and vulgar display, set before those who in the very nature of things follow the lead, by emphasizing the values of home, gentle culture and taste in amusement, a gentle culture and taste in amusement, a great help can be given by the wealthy. REV. BAXTER P. FULLERTON, D. D., LL.D., of St. Louis, ex-moderator of the Presbyterian general assembly, arrived late Saturday night from the east, and is staying at the Wilson hotel. The Rev. Fullerton was to preach at the Third Presbyterian church yesterday morning and evening, but, owing to a severe sore throat, he could not keep the appointment. He will remain in Salt Lake for a few days before resuming his Journey to California. He and his family are on a trip to the coast for a brief vacation.

The team started up the horses from the horses. The team started up the horse of the horses are they collided with another fence, capsizing the buggy and spilling Thornton out. AMUSEMENTS

"A Courier of Fortune" was presented at the Colonial theatre last evening by Ralph Stuart and Mary Hall and associate players. It was a pretty and colorful production, probably as pleasing as any given by this popular stock company. The play throughout breathes the piquant atmosphere of that romantic period when gentlemen of France took their swords and their lives into their hands on slight provocation and dared all for the nation's honor or a woman's smile the nation's honor or a woman's smile as the case might be. In this particular case a prince of the

In this particular case a prince of the blood masquerades as a rogue in effecting an entrance to the Morvaix court, where abuse of power has brought the populace to the verge of rebellion. The complication is furnished by the wicked prince having designs on a beautiful young woman of noble birth who naturally falls in love with the bold adventurer. The play is well staged, prettily costumed and offers an excellent vehicle for the talents of the co-stars. Ralph Stuart is dashing and magnetic in the leading role, while Mary Hall is gracious, sweet and womanly as the titled lady about whom the plot revolves. Oscar Grey Briggs is well cast as the Prince de Rochelle, but a little more dignity and reserve would add to the effectiveness of the role. The burden of comedy in the reserve would add to the effectiveness of the role. The burden of comedy in the play rests lightly upon the shoulders of Anna Cleveland, whose vivacity offers a pleasing contrast to the more serious movements. T. N. Heffron, natural poseur, is perfectly at home as usual in the part of a sneering and smiling rogue. The action of the piece dragged a bit last night, and the dialogue was uncertain at frequent intervals, but with the brushing up that is sure to follow the initial production, the play should prove a strong attraction. It will be presented at the Bungalow for the remainder of the at the Bungalow for the remainder of the
